Africa as a continent needs to step beyond the line and take time to reason outside the box. The reason most African nations keep going to the United Nations and other international organization for aids and grants is irresponsibility which now looms everywhere. The African nations have failed to give positive response to the ability that's inherent in them and in their territories.

Hardly will you see the European countries call on African nations for aid or assistance on its economic issues. This is because they know it's their responsibility to make their economy palatable.

Personal change equals to National change, and until we begin to see things clearly and approach our problems from another point of view, we are not moving anywhere near our promise land.

There are raw, untapped, diversified materials embedded in Africans. We are people of great intellect. It is time to cultivate these treasures.

The task of Nation building is the collective responsibility of all and we all need to play our part to build our nations. Castigating and casting blames on the government won't solve anything!

Only if we can work on our value systems and integrity can we see a new Africa surface.
